Dear Sadye,

I've received quite a few letters since I started school but none of them made me as happy as Howard's little note. I'll cherish it til my dying day.

Howard and I have always been pretty close. we've had our spats but we were always quick to make up. Howard's always treated me regular. He's a swell guy, Sadye, and he deserves a swell girl like you and all the happiness that I'm sure will come with you. Forgive the sentiment.

I'm glad you have decided to wait til I can come in. You can't have a wedding without a ring-bearer. I wish I could go with you on that cruise. I imagine it will be swell.

I'll bet Howard has the chronological order of the arrival of the children all figured out. I can promise you one thing: when the first child is born, you are going to have a star boarder in the person of Mr. Jason Shapiro. wow! wnele Jason! wnele Jase! I'll have to figure out which way I like it best.

I may come in between semesters. I haven't decided as yet. My health is fine and my mental state is fair. I have to run to class now. maybe I'll see you soon. Be a good girl.

Love

Brother Jason

P.S. By the way, if you see my folks say hello and also your mother
